Former art teacher segues into business restoring and conserving works of art

Chaney Fine Art Restoration can restore and help preserve your dusty, cracking, moldy, or faded painting, mural, or other damaged piece of art to like-new condition. But as Liz Chaney explained last week, it can be a delicate and time-consuming process. Liz, wife of former Rotarian Larry Chaney, taught art in Harrisonville and other school districts. Looking for a summer job, she applied to Van Witt Fine Art Conservation where she began learning how to restore art and repair frames. She eventually became the manager and later started her own business from her home in Raymore.

Liz says the work is incredibly rewarding, especially when she has opportunity to work on major pieces of art like a huge mural at Union Station. She explained some of the processes she uses, ranging from X-rays and blacklights to Q-tips and various chemical applications, displaying a before and after painting to illustrate the dramatic change. She also offered tips for conserving and preserving artwork. Learn more about her business at www.chaneyfineart.com.

Announcements from last week's meeting

- Cindy Greenwell called attention to The Rotary Foundation's call for assistance for the victims of Hurricane Melissa. John Foster recalled a similar fundraiser for the city of Slater in 1994-95 after river flooding wiped out railroad tracks and the city water plant. He remembers presenting a $23,000 check from Rotarian donations through the Foundation when he was District Governor.
- Annie Knox reported on the concession stand fundraiser for Our Miracle Field project. She said 7-8 Rotarians and many friends and family members helped raise over $1,000. The club may have opportunities in the future to work concessions at basketball and wrestling contests. Bill Mills commented that he hadn't worked a concession stand in 30 years. "I made a lot of hot chocolate."
- Anne Hickman distributed flyers calling attention to a Career Center open house from 4-7 p.m. on Nov. 20 and enrollment getting underway for various adult education classes.
- Bill Mills agreed to operate the Rotary Train for Christmas on the Square on Dec. 6.
